Royals. Party atmosphere hits London with the eagerly awaited birth of a new prince Champagne bottles popped and shouts of "Hip! Hip! Hooray!" erupted at Buckingham Palace on Monday as Britain welcomed the birth of William and Kate's first child, a boy who is now third in line to the British throne.

Hundreds of Britons and tourists broke into song and dance outside the palace as officials announced that the future king was born at 4:24 p.m., weighing eight pounds, six ounces, at central London's St. Mary's Hospital — the same place where William and his brother Harry were born three decades ago.

The imminent arrival of the royal baby was the subject of endless speculation on social media and was covered for days on live television around the world, but in the end the Royal Family managed to keep it a remarkably private affair.

In line with royal tradition, a terse statement announced only the time of birth, the infant's gender and that mother and child were doing well. It gave no information about the baby's name, and officials would say only that a name would be announced "in due

"Her Royal Highness and her child are both doing well and will remain in hospital overnight," it said. William also issued a brief statement, saying, "We could not be happier."

Officials said William, who was by his wife's side during the birth, would also spend the night in the

London's landmarks, including the London Eye, lit up in the national colours of red, white and blue, and the city had a party atmosphere unmatched since last summer's Olympics.

A large crowd rushed against the Buckingham Palace fences to catch a glimpse of an ornate, gilded easel displaying a small bulletin formally announcing the news.

The framed sheet of paper became the target of a thousand camera flashes as people thrust their smartphones through the railings. Some waved Union Jack flags and partied on the streets to celebrate. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Taxpayers want $52M back: Report

City council asked what to do with $52 million in unclaimed provincial "tax room," and most Calgarians who answered said the money should be returned to taxpayers.

That's according to a report by polling firm Ipsos Reid, which analyzed nearly 10,000 responses gathered during the public engagement period the city held in May and June.

Roughly 53 per cent of the open-form responses fell under the "theme" of "Give it Back!" — one of five suggested options for the funds.

The next most popular options were to invest the money in transit infrastructure and to pay down city debt, each with roughly 15 per cent support.

Ipsos cautioned that the feedback was gathered on a "self-selected basis" and the results "should not be considered representative of the Calgary population as a whole."

Mayor Naheed Nenshi played down the importance of the numbers.

"This summary report, frankly, is not that helpful of a summary," he said. "And that was never the goal. The goal was to have a qualitative survey."

Other aldermen, however, said the results reinforced their sense — and the results of a ThinkHQ survey in June — that giving the money back is the most popular option.

Ald. Diane Colley-Urquhart, who was the designated champion for the transit-infrastructure option during public engagement, said Monday she now supports refunding taxpayers. ROBSON FLETCHER/METRO

Secondary suites shaping up to be election issue

Post-flood housing.

Legalization has been raised and shot down at city council again

ROBSON FLETCHER robson.fletcher@metronews.ca

Calgary's controversial secondary-suite issue was thrust back onto the council agenda Monday and likely secured its place as a key issue in October's municipal election.

Citing a near-zero vacancy rate and an especially dire need for post-flood rental accommodations, Ald. John Mar raised a sudden motion to legalize secondary suites across the city to relieve the housing crunch.

"We have been absolutely immersed in a crisis," he said, adding that the housing stock in flood-affected areas of his ward like Mission and Cliff Bungalow has been "wiped out."

Ald. Druh Farrell said it's "unacceptable" that many existing secondary suites in Sunnyside that predate the current bylaw and had been grandfathered in cannot be legally rebuilt after suffering major flood damage.

Mayor Naheed Nenshi called that quirk of law "ridiculous" and said it will result in "a significant loss of rental housing in the flooded communities."

But most aldermen were not willing to suddenly eliminate the city's secondary-suite restriction, defeating Mar's motion by a 9-6 vote.

"It's not right for us to do a mass land-use change on people who have not had a chance to have any input on it," said Ald. Jim Stevenson, adding that such a move would make ti impossible for Calgarians to choose to live in single-family-dwelling communities.

Ald. Diane Colley-Urquhart, who voted against the motion, said citizens will have their say on the matter in the October election.

"I am more than willing to take this on the campaign trail," she said. "I would like it to come back after the new council is elected."

What's next?

- Numerous members of council said their individual position on secondary suites would likely be a key campaign
- Ald. Peter Demong took things a step further and suggested a plebiscite to go along with the municipal election in October.
- Council requested a report on Calgary's housing situation for further discussion at its next meeting on July 29.

Nenshi calls for $104M fund to repair, prevent flood damage

Matter of pace. Mayor wants city to have dedicated fund right away, some aldermen want to see how things shake out with province first

ROBSON FLETCHER

Mayor Naheed Nenshi revealed details of his proposal to use Calgary's $52 million in annual "tax room" for flood relief Monday, but the matter won't be put to a vote until Tuesday, at the earliest.

That's because of city council's jam-packed post-flood agenda — totalling some 2,200 pages — that saw Monday's meeting stretch well into Monday night and be carried over with plenty left to address.

Already, though, the mayor appeared to run into some stiff opposition to his idea to set aside two years' worth of the money — $104 million in total — for flood mitigation and prevention. Numerous aldermen described that plan as premature.

"I just don't see what's the big rush when there are so many unknowns out there," said Ald. Dale Hodges, noting the questions of who pays for what damage is still being sorted out between the provincial and federal governments and insurance companies.

They mayor, however, said it's "very clear" the provincial and federal governments won't cover all damage and the city will have to pay to repair, replace and upgrade some of its infrastructure and assets that weren't fully insured.

we don't have the money set aside, we have to get it from future taxation or debt anyway, and I'm not keen on incurring more debt,"

Nenshi's plan

The first item of the mayor's motion calls on the city to "commence negotiations with the federal and provincial governments with the goal of maximizing recovers of all city funds spent.'

It then calls on the city to use the $52 million from 2012 and 2013 to first cover flood relief and recovery costs not covered by other governments or insurance, then to use any remaining funds on "disaster mitigation and prevention infrastructure.

Use of the funds beyond that should then be part of the 2014-17 budget process, according to the motion.

Disgraced Alta. MLA won't resign seat

Mike Allen, elected in 2012 for the governing Progressive Conservatives, was arrested last week in a prostitution sting while on a government trip in St. Paul.

Allen, 51, said Monday that he needs to explore whether he can rebuild the trust of constituents before he decides whether to stay on as a member of the legislature.

"I will be saying sorry to a lot of people for a long time. I have already faced my parents, my children and many of my friends, and now it is my responsibility to face my community," he said at a news conference in his constituency office.

Right now Allen continues to sit as the member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo as an Independent.

He stepped down from the Tory caucus last Tuesday, the morning after his arrest. He also paid back the $2,000 ex-asked people living in his constituency whether he should stay or step aside. Of the 219 people who responded, 69 per cent said he needs to go.

The party said the poll has a margin of error of 6.6 per cent, 19 times out of 20.

"The people of Fort Mc-Murray-Wood Buffalo need a full-time MLA standing up for their interests each and every day, not an MLA facing down scandals and deciding whether or not he should resign," said Wildrose Leader Danielle Smith. The canadian press

Protesters call for GuZoo closure

Calgary, Edmonton rallies. Three Hills zoo has been centre of controversy for years

TURNER

Standing on a downtown sidewalk Monday holding a sign reading "Shut GuZoo Down Now!!!" Cheryl Cooper said she was fighting the same battle she was two years ago.

Cooper was one of about 15 protesters outside the Calgary Court Centre trying to draw attention to the roadside zoo in Three Hills, which has been under scrutiny recently and in years past.

"I was fighting for them to shut down two years ago," Cooper said. "I've seen some terrible pictures of GuZoo via social media and it breaks my heart to see how those animals are being treated."

The zoo had its licence revoked in 2011, and it was reinstated under more stringent guidelines shortly afterward. Controversy flared again in early July when the Council of Concerned Albertans for Animal Welfare and Public Safety released photos and video taken at the zoo.

"It's just continuing to get worse," CCAAWPS board member Sylvia Meier said.

Jessica Potter, spokesperson for Alberta Sustainable Resource Development, said her ture and Rural Development, are continuing to investigate the most recent photos and video footage.

"We do need to validate that information," she said. "Under the wildlife act, there are permits given to the zoo and there's conditions that they need to meet, and as long as they're meeting those conditions then the permit is fine. What we're doing right now is determining whether or not they are."

Residents to get say on University Heights redevelopment

After submitting hundreds of written pages opposing the redevelopment of a northwest strip mall, residents will have a chance to speak directly to council on Tuesday morning.

The area alderman, however, doubts there will be much compromise.

"I may come up with some amendments, which might sort it out a little bit," Ald. Dale Hodges said.

"Right now it's an agreement to disagree between the parties."

The redevelopment of the Stadium Shopping Centre, at the corner of 16 Avenue and Uxbridge Drive N.W., would see it turned into a much larger mixeduse centre that "provides employment opportunities, residential accommodation, and services," according to a city-planning document.

Mayor Naheed Nenshi said the issue has gone "a little bit off the rails," since much of the public opposition is to the density and land use of the proposed development.

"The land use is in place it has been in place for decades," Nenshi said. "What we're discussing is how to distribute that density across that site.'

Rafting accident

Three fished out of Bow River

Rescue crews leaped into action on Monday after three people were thrown into the Bow River when their raft struck a bridge abutment.

The Aquatics Rescue Team launched their boat at about 3:15 p.m. and found two people stranded on a gravel bank downstream of the Louise Bridge. A third person made it to short safely, and there were no injuries reported. All three rafters were wearing PFDs.

The Calgary Fire Department is once again reminding Calgarians to use extreme caution when rafting on the city's waterways. Because the river channels were altered during recent flooding, officials say previous knowledge of the rivers may no longer apply and people on the river may need to react quickly to navigate hazards. metro

Thousands of books may have been lost to floodwaters but the Calgary Public Library is hoping community generosity will help keep its collection afloat.

"Twenty thousand is, we think, about the amount we lost in books, DVDs and CDs," said Paul McIntyre Royston, Calgary Public Library Foundation president and CEO.

Keeping literature in mind, the foundation is putting on a book drive titled 20,000 Books Under the Bow — a play on Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea.

McIntyre Royston said the library hopes Calgarians will donate 20,000 gently used books, DVDs and CDs, which will then be sold on sites such as Amazon

"We've probably already passed about 5,000 (donated items) already," he said. "Typically we'll earn as low as $1 a book, but it could be as much as $5 a book."

McIntyre Royston explained that it's better to buy new books because the library can purchase the items that are in demand from Calgary library cardholders. The estimated cost of the destroyed items is about $200.000.

Donations can be dropped off at any Calgary Public Library, except for the Central Library, between 10 a.m. and 5 p.m. on July 27.

Canadians greeted their likely future king with a flurry of congratulations on Monday, but the long-awaited announcement of the prince's birth didn't seem to spark the same frenzy that surrounded his parents' wedding.

The country's political leaders were quick to send good wishes, with many issuing statements shortly after Clarence House officially announced that the Duchess of Cambridge had delivered a son.

Prime Minister Stephen Harper hailed the arrival of "a future sovereign of Canada," calling it a "highly anticipated moment for Canadians given the special and warm relationship that we share with our Royal Family."

Gov.-Gen. David Johnston also congratulated Prince William and his wife Kate, saying that as a father of five, he knows well "the elation that a new arrival brings to a young family."

Even those opposed to the monarchy welcomed the prince's arrival.

Tom Freda, director of the organization Citizens for a Canadian Republic, said any news involving the Royal Family renews the debate over the relevance of a monarchist system, "and debate is good."

Woman claiming she was raped in Dubai pardoned

With her passport back in hand, a Norwegian woman at the centre of a Dubai rape claim dispute said Monday that officials dropped her 16-month sentence for having sex outside marriage in the latest clash between the city's Islamic-based legal codes and its international branding as a Western-friendly haven.

Dubai authorities hope the pardon of the 24-yearold woman will allow them to sidestep another potentially embarrassing blow to the city's heavily promoted image as a forward-looking model of luxury, excess and cross-cultural understanding.

Nothing's free. More unpaid interns in Canada suing for back wages

Unpaid interns agree to work free in exchange for training and job prospects, but a growing number of them say employers aren't living up to their side of the bargain.

In recent months, former interns in the U.S. have won several high-profile lawsuits for back wages, spurring a growing backlash here in Canada.

Jainna Patel, 24, a math and statistics graduate from McMaster University, filed a federal labour complaint against Bell Mobility after spending five weeks in its Professional Management Program (PMP) in Mississauga, Ont.

In response, Human Resources Development Canada sent a letter to Bell, requesting it either pay Patel's back wages or contest the complaint she filed. The company had until July 9 to file its response.

A Bell spokesperson told Torstar News Service that their program is not only legal, but one of the best internships in the country.

In the year since Patel first filed her complaint she hasn't heard from Bell, but remains hopeful because interns across North America have been winning cases like hers.

Last month, two unpaid interns working on the Oscarwinning film Black Swan successfully sued Fox Searchlight pictures. A New York district judge ordered the film production company to pay back wages because the interns did the same work as regular employees, provided value to the company and performed low-level tasks that didn't require any specialized training. Fox is appealing the ruling.

Shortly after the decision, interns at Gawker, an American celebrity website, also filed a suit for unpaid wages.

Here in Canada, interns are also starting to file complaints.

In 2012, Kyle Iannuzzi was awarded almost $1,000 in back wages from Platinum Events Group in what he believes was the first successful complaint against a company for an unpaid internship in Ontario.

WHAT ARE YOU STARING AT?

My friend and I have a code word that we use whenever we catch each other staring at someone for a prolonged period of time. It's a subtle way to notify one another that it's time to look away. This is more of a one-sided initiative, however, as I never let my gaze linger for more than a couple of second; she, on the other hand, has a tendency to stare excessively.

She insists that she doesn't realize she's doing it — hence the need for a secret phrase to covertly remind her to stop being creepy — and she's certainly not the only person out there with a habitual staring problem. As a daily public-transit user, I know all about uncomfortable eye contact with strangers. It can be difficult to know where to look in a packed train or bus, which is why most of us use props — books, cellphones, perhaps even this very newspaper - in an effort to avoid gazing at fellow passengers.

Social norms dictate that nonstop staring should be avoided, and yet some people just can't help themselves. Whenever I catch someone looking at me I immediately feel two things: embarrassed (because I fear a stray piece of spinach must have wedged itself in between my teeth) and kind of irritat-

Staring, even if it's harmless or unintentional, has the tendency to make others feel self-conscious and objectified. Nobody wants to be eyed up and down by a stranger, but what is the appropriate response to this sort of behaviour? I've never had the audacity to react with, "Take a picture, it'll last longer," but I have thrown out a passive aggressive "Can I help you?" on a couple of occasions.

Then again, maybe this notion that everybody is constantly looking at each other is all in our heads.

Earlier this year, researchers at the University of Sydney published a study on the topic of gaze perception and discovered that humans have a tendency to presume other people are staring at them, even when they aren't. And no it's not because we're a bunch of paranoid narcissists — this presumption is actually a defence mechanism.

In primates, a lengthy direct gaze is a sign of aggression. Researchers theorize that this hostile interpretation could explain why humans are hard-wired to assume that they are being looked at in order to anticipate potential threats. It might also explain why we have an innate ability to "feel" as though someone is watching us even if we can't see them directly.

So remember, if you do come across someone worth gawking at, there's a strong chance that they are going to know about it.

Trance

Director. Danny Boyle

Stars. James McAvoy, Vincent Cassel, Rosario

Genre-hopping British filmmaker Danny Boyle describes this serpentine psycho-thriller as personal therapy, a stress reliever he made while also directing last summer's Olympics opening ceremony. The stop-and-start nature of the production may account for the film's patchwork vibe. More difficult is the lack of feeling it summons for the three principal characters, played by James McAvoy, Rosario Dawson and Vincent Cassel. Trance begins as a heist picture, one in which Goya's fearsome masterpiece Witches in the Air sells for a cool $42 million in London, before vanishing under the watch of auction official Simon (McAvoy). Then the confusion really starts, as a hypnotherapist Elizabeth (Dawson) and crook (Cassel) get involved. The problem with Trance is that Boyle and his writers want to mess with more than just Simon's brain. The story becomes twisted and unreliable to the point of being downright silly, as motivations shift and finding the missing Goya starts to seem like the furthest thing from everybody's mind. Daniel Radcliffe's recent gaunt, exhausted appearance has fans worried, but his rep insists it's all work-related, telling Yahoo's omg! that Radcliffe's current stint in The Cripple of Inishmaan on stage in London "is a very demanding role, physically."

But the toll the show, and the summer weather, have been taking on the Harry Potter star haven't stopped him from tending to his fans.

Best Health

BEST HEALTH MINUTE Bonnie Munday Editor-in-chief Best Health Magazine

In the Summer issue of Best Health we feature an article by one of our columnists, registered dietitian Sue Mah. She talks about the importance of getting enough fluids, especially in the hot summer months when we sweat more. But, as we talked about last week, not all drinks are created equal.

Healthy choices

In addition to water, coconut water and vitaminenhanced waters, here are some choices:

Lower-fat milk

It has lots of essential nutrients. One cup of one per cent milk has calcium, vitamin D, magnesium and phosphorus.

Powder of liquid flavour enhancers

If you find plain water boring, products like Crystal Light and MiO boost flavour while adding few or no calories. They're made with artificial sweeteners approved by Health Canada.

Vegetable juice

These typically have one full serving of veggies, and fewer calories than fruit juice. Choose the lowsodium variety.

Not-so-healthy choices

In addition to regular pop, fruit juice and iced-coffee drinks, here are some you might want to limit:

Sports drinks

A bottle of a sports drink like Gatorade contains 150 calories and 35 grams of sugar. It also has 270 mg of sodium. Try one of the calorie-reduced versions.

Energy drinks

Caffeine and sugar are the main ingredients. One can has 27 grams of sugar. And these should never be mixed with alcohol, as it can cause irregular heartbeat and other side effects.

The bitter truth about sweeteners

Debate. Have a sweet tooth but don't know what's best (or worse): fake sugar or real? Here's the lowdown on the popular sweeteners

life@metronews.ca

Want to know what sweeteners are good for you? Metro breaks down the benefits and drawbacks of the most common kinds.

Sugar

Natural, yes, but "added sugars" (which also include simple sugars like honey and brown sugar) was recently put on the American Heart Association's (AHA) black list of items that were detrimental to heart health.

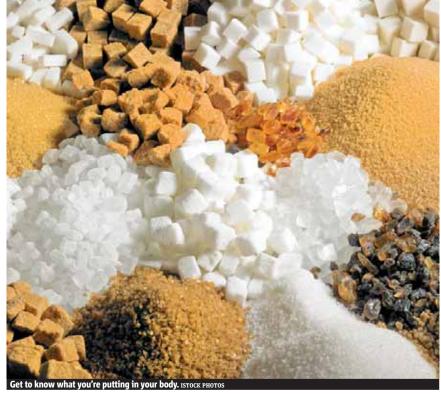

The AHA said that the average American eats 22 teaspoons of added sugar a day, about 355 empty calories. They recommend 100 sugar calories for women (25 grams, or six teaspoons) and 150 calories for men (37 grams, or nine teaspoons) daily.

"The best rule of thumb is to start with an unsweetened food and add just a touch of sweetener yourself," nutritionist Dr. Janet Brill explains. "For example, try unsweetened iced tea or plain, non-fat yogurt and add in a touch of your sweetener of choice."

Aspartame

One way to avoid added sugars is to use an artificial sweetener. Aspartame is made up of methanol, phenylalanine and aspartic acid, and is 200 times sweeter than sugar, says Brill. Brand names of the product include Nutrasweet and Equal. As an added bonus, it is calorie-free.

While the U.S. Food and Drug Administration and the European Food Safety Authority have said it is safe for human consumption, some research has cast doubt on its long-term safety. Two Italian studies have shown that very high doses of aspartame might increase the chance of

I know a fake when I eat it

"Your body cannot metabolize fake sugars. There has been many other health and digestive challenges reported with these fake sugars."

Mark Macdonald

developing blood-related cancers like leukemia and lymphoma in rats. No studies have linked higher rates of human cancer to aspartame use.

Malitol and sorbitol

These artificial sweeteners are sugar alcohols. They are not completely absorbed in the body, which means that the body takes in less calories than when you consume regular sugar, Brill explains.

However, they can cause several gastrointestinal side effects.

"Most 'sugar free' or 'diet' foods are made with one of these sweeteners, which is exactly why when you eat those foods you are more gassy and bloated," says celebrity nutritionist Mark Macdonald, author of New York Times-bestseller Body Confidence. "Your body cannot metabolize fake sugars. There has been many other health and digestive challenges reported with these fake sugars, so you are always better to use the healthy sweeteners to sweeten up your food."

Agave nectar

Agave nectar is a natural sweetener made from the same plant that they use to make tequila. It ranks low on the glycemic index, which means it does not raise blood sugar levels rapidly.

However, this may be due to the fact it is hard for the body to process because it is a form of fructose, chemically similar to high fructose corn syrup

Though it contains some additional minerals, it is in too low quantities to make a significant difference.

Stevia

Stevia is a natural sweetener made from a South American plant that has been used for hundreds of years.

"Stevia is the healthiest low cal sweetener on the market, so that is what I recommend most," Macdonald pointed out.

However, recent research shows that stevia may not lower blood sugar levels and could negatively affect blood sugar control in diabetics.

Also there is not much research completed on pregnant women who use stevia, so some doctors suggest avoiding using the product if in that situation.

People allergic to the Asteraceae/Compositae family of plants (which includes ragweed, chrysanthemums, marigolds and daisies) may have a reaction to it.

Conundrum

You are going out to an important formal dinner at your boss's home. Your fouryear-old child is home sick with a temperature and has a babysitter.

Ís it reasonable for you to keep your cellphone on the dinner table to take any texts or calls that may come in from the babysitter, even if the babysitter is a mom herself who has babysat for you many times before?

Answer

It is never OK to leave your cellphone on the dinner table. Firstly if you are worried that your child is that sick, than perhaps it might be better to stay home and take care of him yourself.

Secondly, if you must go out and anticipate a call, first inform your hostess in private of the situation, secondly keep your cellphone on vibrate and in your pocket or lap. In the event that it does ring, excuse yourself from the table (don't explain why, just a simple "excuse me") and leave the dinning room before taking the call. If the situation is serious, then return to the dinning room and politely whisper into the hostess's ear that you must excuse yourself and return home at once.

Remember to send a note of apology the following day, and include how your child

Making a case to keep a cash stash

MONEY llison Griffiths noney@metronews.ca

I love cash. When bad things happen — lost wallet, power outage and credit or debit card terminal woes - a secret cash stash rules.

Here's a case in point. My youngest daughter had a fraudulent charge on her credit card. She caught it and got a new card. However, she now appears to be on a high-risk watch list and any "odd" transaction triggers a block. On a recent trip to the U.S. her card was declined while trying to fill up her car to drive back to Canada.

Luckily, she occasionally listens to her mom and had an emergency $100 stashed in her

At home and everywhere you go some cash should be available. And I don't mean through ATM machines. They can run out of bills, break down or be felled by a power outage as happened during the recent floods in Alberta and Greater Toronto.

At home, I recommend singles have around $200 cash while families should aim for at least $100 per person. Yes, someone could break in and find the dough under your mattress. But the risk is small compared to the inconvenience of being stuck without money in an emergency.

During holidays or business trips, you should have sufficient funds available for at least one night at a hotel plus meals. Sure, there are emergency replacement services available, but you can't always contact the credit card company and a couple of days might pass before the replacement arrives.

During Hurricane Sandy friends were forced to stay an extra three days in Virginia with no cellphone service and the single ATM at the local onehorse town was on the fritz. Fortunately, they had $500 cash and were comfortably able to wait out the storm. Kids also need to be made aware of the emergency cash. A note and receipt for any money used is a good plan. Granted, a stash can be tempting. When my oldest daughter was in high school she cleaned out the teapot and bought pizza, movies and taxi rides for a bunch of friends. She paid it back, with interest, and never went near it again — except for real emergencies.

Olympics. Mobility a priority for Yzerman on larger ice surfaces

Sidney Crosby and Jonathan Toews lead a list of 47 players invited to a summer orientation camp for the Canadian men's Olympic hockey team.

The camp in Calgary runs from Aug. 25 to 28 and will begin the process of selecting the 25 players who will play for Canada at the 2014 Winter Games in Sochi, Russia.

Crosby and Toews are among 15 invitees who helped Canada win gold at the 2010 Games in Vancouver.

Pushing forward

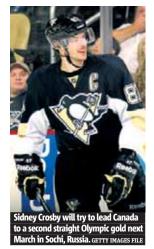

"Some of these younger players are forcing their way into the lineup." Team Canada executive director Steve Yzerman. Newcomers on the orientation camp list include defencemen Alex Pietrangelo and P.K. Subban and forwards Steven Stamkos, John Tavares, Claude Giroux and Brad Marchand.

The others are goalie Roberto Luongo, defencemen Dan Boyle, Drew Doughty, Duncan Keith, Brent Seabrook and Shea Weber, and forwards Patrice Bergeron, Corey Perry, Ryan Getzlaf, Rick Nash, Mike Richards, Eric Staal and Joe Thornton.

Team executive director Steve Yzerman said being mobile on the larger international ice surface in Sochi will be key. "Ultimately, we'll pick the best players available to us, but playing on a bigger ice surface, I believe there is a priority on being able to skate," Yzerman said on a conference call. "That will weigh into our final decisions on putting this team together."

Among the defenceman invited to the orientation camp is Calgary's Mike Green of the Washington Capitals.
